

Abstract

Remuneration of members of the governing bodies of joint stock companies from a comparative perspective

The purpose of this thesis is to analyze the law regarding remuneration of members of the governing bodies of joint stock companies in comparative perspective. This thesis deals with comparison of Czech and English jurisdiction. The topic is a highly relevant with regard to events of financial crisis 2008. The thesis primarily devotes its attention to the law contained in the Act on Business Corporation however it also takes into account the Commercial Code. Introductory part of the thesis outlines theoretical background of remuneration. It is followed by chapter describing concept of remuneration and introducing specific types of remuneration. Third part analyzes Czech law on remuneration of boards of directors contained in Act on Business Corporations and it is divided according individual titles that give rise to right on remuneration. In the last part of the thesis author describes English company law.

Key words: remuneration, board of directors, comparison